

The National Institutes of Health has launched a new online resource for older drivers and families seeking information on an often sensitive topic: Is it still safe to drive?

The site offers up-to-date information on how aging may affect driving, including physical changes, safety issues and ways older drivers can cope with driving skills change.

It also offers suggestions for adjusting driving habits when there are changes in hearing, vision and reaction times.

It is available at nihseniorhealth.gov/olderdrivers/howagingaffectsdriving/01.html.
